Working while studying is a great way to gain practical experience and get a taste of the local culture. The Australian international student visa (subclass 500) allows you to work while you study. Look for jobs that offer flexible hours to balance your study and work commitments.

Work hours

You can work up to 48 hours every two weeks while studying and unlimited hours during study breaks.

Starting work

Student visa holders granted offshore can start working once their course of study begins. However, different work rights can apply. Check your ImmiAccount to find out your visa conditions.
